-David Corcoran
The New York Times 2004

Every Friday and Saturday night Richie Cecere and his namesake 18 piece orchestra take to the intimate stage in the supperclub and deliver a performance straight from the old Copacabana Club in New York City, complete with elaborately costumed show-girls, visiting comedians, and a celebrity or two in the audience.

The restaurant is comprised of three floors of Dining Rooms (all with full bars), enabling guests to linger in a plush atmosphere before sitting down to a four star dinner and enjoying a menu inspired by some of the great New York City institutions; The Bull and Bear at the

"The elevator doors opened to a room which made me think of the glamour of the 1930's and 40's."

Waldorf Astoria, the gone but not forgotten Oak Bar at the old Plaza Hotel, Peter Lugers, and countless others. Oysters are still one of the most popular items on the menu and coupled with one of the great vintages on the house wine list (comprised of almost 10,000 bottles) "You can't beat that combination."

Guests ease into their seats in the supperclub for a journey into the past, at least for one magical evening, anxiously awaiting for the show to begin and to hear that all familiar,

"And Now...

It's Showtime !"
